Do you ever go to exhibitions?

Find a false friend in paragraph B that means to keep information about something.
When readers of The New York Times looked at the newspaper on 22 November 2010, they were presented with some amazing photos of the war in Afghanistan. What made the photos particularly interesting is that they had been taken with a smartphone rather than a traditional camera.

Photographer Damon Winter, who was named Photographer of the Year in the USA, spent a few days with an American army unit in northern Afghanistan. He wanted to record their everyday lives. He decided to use his mobile phone rather than his usual camera because he thought the soldiers seemed more comfortable with the phone. He pointed out that they often use their phones to photograph each other and so they were more relaxed. This made the photos more memorable because they weren’t posed.

Of course, the vast majority of photos taken using mobiles are not taken by professional photographers, but by ordinary people. Although these images may be poor quality and are often just head shots sent from one friend to another, more and more of these photos are now appearing in exhibitions because they provide an interesting record of everyday life.

A recent exhibition in London provides a good example. The event was called No Comfort and people in different countries were asked by the show’s organizer, Alex Sturrock, to send in images of their daily lives taken on mobile phones. Sturrock wanted people in London to see what life is like for people living in countries like Zimbabwe or Haiti. He felt that people had become desensitized by images in the mainstream media, but hoped that the more personal mobile phone photos would provide a more dramatic picture.

Getting the photos was hard work. Sturrock emailed lots of people before he got a positive response from Preston Rolls, a photographer in Zimbabwe. Rolls told children about the exhibition and they were very excited. Suddenly Sturrock started receiving photos which he uploaded onto a computer in an art gallery in London. The photos were made into a slideshow which was projected onto the gallery’s wall. Every time a new photo arrived it was automatically added to the slideshow.

Sturrock also received a series of photos from Kabul, Toronto and Gaza. As he says, ‘They’re images from places we see so much negative stuff written about, yet they are really warm stories. The images from Zimbabwe are really intimate, they’re shot by the kids and young people of the area. You can’t take pictures like that unless you are part of a community, I think it’s a rare insight.’

be + past participle

1 Look at the album cover. Do you know where the photo was taken?

Abbey Road

The cover of The Beatles’ album, Abbey Road, is one of the world’s most famous photographs. In it the band are being led across a zebra crossing by John Lennon. Abbey Road is both the name of the street and a recording studio.

The photo was taken by Iain Macmillan. If you look closely, you can see Paul Cole, an American tourist, on the right-hand side. He didn’t know the photo had been taken until the album was released.

The cover has been copied by many artists including The Red Hot Chilli Peppers and Kanye West. No doubt it will be copied again many times in the future. The crossing can still be seen by Beatles’ fans as it is now protected by the government because of its cultural importance.

A biography of an artist

a Frida Kahlo was born in 1907 in Mexico. She became an internationally popular painter, famous for her vibrant colours and dramatic symbolism. Her paintings were influenced by the indigenous cultures of Mexico and European styles.

b Kahlo’s early life was marked by bad luck. In 1925, she was badly injured in a traffic accident and was in hospital for over three months. During this time, Kahlo started painting the first of many self-portraits. Although she eventually recovered, Kahlo was in pain for the rest of her life. Four years later, in 1929, she married Diego Rivera, another painter. Theirs was a stormy marriage and finally they divorced, but they got married again a few years later.

c Kahlo continued to paint and in 1939 her paintings were exhibited in Paris. This was the key to her later success as one of her paintings was bought by the Louvre. This was the first time that a modern Mexican artist’s work had ever been bought by the world-famous Parisian museum.

d Kahlo’s later life was a period of pain and suffering and she died in 1954 after a long illness. She was one of the most talented and successful women painters of the 20th century. Her success is an inspiration to women artists everywhere.
