Workshops:

Getting Teenagers Involved

In this highly practical workshop, we will begin by looking at 21st Century teenage learners and we will explore the factors which support their learning and motivation. We will then consider how getting our teens involved impacts the materials we use, our own teaching, and most importantly their learning. Through participation in activities, some discussion and sharing of ideas, we hope that participants will leave with a bag full of activities and strategies for the classroom.

Five ways to well-being for teachers and their students

How can we promote mental health and well-being within and outside the classroom? This highly practical workshop will begin with the evidence and five 'official' ways. We'll then explore activities for us and for our students which may help fill that gap. Expect participation, lots of discussion and at the very least some new ideas for your next class!
